NEW NEWS OF YESTERDAY

Treasures of an Old Sea Captain In Heaven.

John Cadman, Veteran Mariner, Sees Signs That If He Did Right Here He Would Receive His Reward Hereafter.

By E. J. EDWARDS.

Captain John Codman was the last, as he was for more than thirty years, the best illustration of the old-fashioned type of sea captain, especially the sea captain who brought to Dothan much of its commercial present wealth in the early part of the past century.

Captain Codman retired from the sea a few years before the beginning of the civil war. He was a little man, thin of face, slight of physique, and weather-beaten, and in the early eighties he became one of the prominent figures in Washington, where he lived for a number of years. He was an earnest advocate of a tariff for revenue only, and in connection therewith his name was a familiar one in the public print of that time and he was personally known to the leading men of Massachusetts and of Washington. In the mid-eighties, when came to know him, the captain had also gained a reputation as the author of a charming book descriptive of the pleasures of horseback riding, a sport of which he was an enthusiastic devotee. He used occasionally to ride with George Hancock, the historian, to the suburbs of Washington; and it was a common fondness for companionship which led those two men into most friendly relations, which lasted during the lifetime of Hancock.

Captain Codman invested a portion of his fortune, not a large one, and gained in the Clinton trade, in some mines in Montana. Occasionlly he visited those properties and he became greatly interested in the miners, studying always to do something for their moral and physical welfare.

"I would take it at a great favor if you would visit the second-hand book stores of Washington and buy for me various sets of biography and history," he said to me once. "I do not care how much they cost, provided the expense is a reasonable one. I want to use them as the basis for library for the miners who are employed in my mines in Montana."

A few weeks later I was able to say to Captain Codman that I had found a sufficient number of the kind of books that he wanted. He did not ask me what they were and soon ed entirely satisfied when I told him that the cost was about three hundred dollars.

"I am not entirely unselfish in sending these little treasures to my miners in Montana," Captain Codman confessed. "Of course, I have always felt that it was incumbent upon me to do what I could to make their hard life as easy as possible. And yet I was thinking of myself when I decided to send these little libraries to the miners.

"I am in religion a Unitarian. I am a profound believer in the fundamental truths which are in the New Testament. I believe implicitly in the Sermon on the Mount. But I don't know much about the kind of life we will have hereafter, though I read various expositions of it, written by persons who profess to know what it will be. Still, it has occurred to me that if I do that is right here, then I shall have reward according to my merits hereafter, and there are two things which I have done, and will continue to do as long as I am able, in the hope that I shall obtain credit marks for the future life.

"I make it my duty whenever I see a banana skin or an orange peel upon the sidewalk, or in any place where a person stepping upon the peel might be in danger of slipping, carefully to remove and destroy the dangerous thing. I will go blocks out of my way to do that. I sometimes think that I have in this way prevented many an accident. Then, too, I try to do good among my miners. I believe I have done a good deal in buying these little libraries for them. The reading of these books will make them happy and good. So I am in hopes that these two actions may avail me a credit mark in the hereafter. I think they will."

And the kindly old man spoke with perfect sincerity and in that simplicity of heart and conduct which were all the life characteristics of him.

May Have Better Luck.

The waitress was giving Harriet the benefit of her advice and counsel, reaching a momentous step the latter contemplated.

"Of course, Harriet," said the lady of the bourse, "if you intend to get married, that's your own business; but you mustn't forget that marriage is a very serious matter."

"Ever, ma'am," said Harriet. "You mean I know it's sometimes important, now, maybe I'll have better luck than you did, mom."

To Be Figured Out.

"The staff is father of the man." "Where does the mother come in when she smokes cigarettes like her boy and wears short skirts like her girl?"

Value of Deep Breathing.

Writing on the cultivation of physical fitness in the Herald of the Golden Age, Eugene Miles says that those who have mastered the art of deep and full breathing are thereby enabled to master their emotions—they can overcome vain and acquire control of the mind and of the circulation of the blood. The control of the breathing prevents one from becoming hurried and flurried. Those who hurriedly, although not hasty, breathing can be adapted to various needs—for instance, in producing warmth or the opposite effect—or one can breathe in order to become more sensitive. In fact, the all round value of deep and full breathing cannot be overestimated. Of all physical practices this is the first and foremost, and this ought to be regulated without being in the least conspicuous. If you have learned how to breathe deeply and fully twice people will not suspect it—they only notice that you are calm, poised and good tempered.

He Had Told It.

Next to Joseph Chamberlain, the Birmingham humor writer, none than Jessie Collyer, in politics and friendship, Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Collyer have been inseparable for many years. They often shared their platform speeches, and in regard to one story that circulated there when both were taking part in meeting the first speaker was caught in its web.

It happened that Mr. Collyer arrived late at a meeting one night, but was due to speak before Mr. Chamberlain. As he was launching out into the story he felt his cravat pulled, and a voice behind him chided:

"I've told it!"

So Mr. Collyer, doleful, but still as spry as ever, turned to his host. "Mr. Chamberlain tell the story as soon as he gets on his legs. I thought you told you not to!" he said, referring to "I've told it!" recited the impudent boy, but not without "P.T. Mall Gerte."

A Legend About Gerte.

The ancient Greeks thought that all structure was built out of souls and that the animal life had soul through its blood vessels between the brain and the heart. This animal life, however, was not able to help itself because the heart had to pump the blood and the brain had to receive the blood only once every four hours. To cross it should take its soul. This was forced upon the heart which had to strain its sides to avoid its prey. The blood vessels, too, had to move to stand a set over before any human being was enabled to cross. On learning of the trouble the eye moved the bridge and a rabbit the middle to eyes out.

A Girl's Small Feet in Holland

"But it was too funny at The Hague. There at the same time with me was a little Atlanta girl who has very tiny feet and is very pretty. I went one day with her to what they call a drug store over there and on the way back she slipped to look in a window. I heard her shout and turned to find her surrounded by a crowd of men and women. They were staring at her particularly at her feet and the women would press near and take hold of the bottom of her skirt and lift it and other women would try to pluck the trimming from her sleeves. The crowd grew larger as we neared the hotel. Most of the people in the crowd wore wooden shoes and we were told they were amazed at the size of my friend's feet." — New York Sun

Men and Women Golfers.

Cecil Lettich, who has made a study of golfing for girls says: women should not expect to win the International championship. While the best women golfers may compare favorably with the average man player yet they will be hopelessly outdistanced by the men experts he asserts. There is no doubt in his mind that men are better equipped physically to carry off the championship in golf matches and while the game is just as much fun for the women as for the men yet women cannot be victorious. He says that skill counts and that a girl may be just as skillful in handling golf clubs as a man but when it comes to strength and hard hitting she is hopelessly capped.

Royal Photographers.

Like her sister, Queen Alexandra, the dowager empress of Russia is an adept at photography. Once Queen Alexandra was snapping some of her relatives while on a visit to Windsor and the dowager empress, producing her camera, essayed to obtain a picture of the unconscious queen. She was preparing to snap when Queen Mary, then the princess of Wales, came quietly behind and raising her own camera took her royal aunt in the act. On the same plate was a picture of Queen Alexandra also snapping the magazine which she calls "The Bitter Hill."

Washington Irving—a Steamer

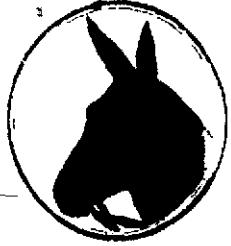

The new steamer of the Hudson River Line is to carry six thousand passengers. To those who know and love the river and the boats that ply on it this yielding to the size mania will not be pleasant. There is compensation however for the boat is to be named Washington Irving. The present largest boat on the river is the Hendrik Hudson and it is right that the man of letters should overshadow the discoverer. The Washington Irving it is said will have a greater licensed capacity than any other steamboat in the world—Detroit Free Press.

The baron ordered a middle aged spinster was late and the rabby came in for a good rating when he finally drove up to the door. I shall probably miss my train" the baron said. He informed him he still had you respond. I want to see your name my man. Do you understand?" I replied "yes" quickly. The driver closed up his horse's ears. You'll make your train all right I assure you. I assured the woman fully. And I'll let you have the number if you like. If you can't have no name, that's promised another young lady."

HOW KANSAS GETS PUBLICITY

To Get the Legion Reputation the World Over Through Good Work of F. D. Colburn

The value of advertising to the man in commerce life is generally recognized, and the phrase, "It pays to advertise," has become familiar to many business men, and indeed, questions its truth.

The nation is so poor, to pay advertising is a waste of money, time and the like, to gain much of the city or country. Advertising is the only way to do it. It is in the interest of the city or country that advertising be made. Advertising has been conducted in a variety of ways, bodies, and organizations and groups. In the past few years a few cities have undertaken systematic campaigns and have given excellent results.

Kansas has probably the most efficient publicity bureau of any state in the Union, and the credit for this is due almost entirely to F. D. Colburn, secretary of the state board of agriculture. Mr. Colburn's business is to tell the world about the agricultural possibilities of Kansas, and that he does it is easily indicated by the editorial work to be found in news papers all over the country relating the wonders of the state. Some of the mediums employed to keep Kansas prominently on the agricultural map are as follows:

Biennial report containing statistics regarding the progress of each of the 100 counties in the state. This report now has upward of 1,000 pages and is packed full of reports on various methods of advanced farming and other data. Twenty thousand of these are distributed, many of them going as far as Alaska and South Africa.

Fifteen thousand quarterly reports issued every three months, filled with agricultural news, and boosting Kansas. They are in demand among farmers throughout the west.

Weekly articles about Kansas agriculture, sent to the dailies in the principal cities of the country and to all the agricultural weeklies.

Miscellaneous reports from time to time to mailing list of over 10,000. Cards and booklets emphasizing one feature of Kansas production as, for example, "The Corn That Kansas Farmers Raise," "Alfalfa's Ability," ability, of course, referring to the Kansas soil.

Two thousand holiday cards each year, a striking design on one side, and a condensed statement of crop production on the other.

Speaking of the results of Mr. Colburn's work, which is alive and up to date based on dry statistical like most agricultural reports—Charles Monroe Morgan, writing in the independent, says:

"Out of all has been crystallized a sentiment that Kansas soil is uniquely productive, that the farming methods are progressive, and that it offers opportunities for prosperous agriculture. It has convinced the eastern investor that he can safely let Kansas real estate mortgages, and has enlarged the reserve cities twelve times during the deposits of Kansas banks. It has brought to the attention of the press and has presented to the orators and newspaper writers, that team with enthusiasm."

It past Kansas, and the other, and other states were, and still are methods equally productive.

A good advertisement when well placed should sound like well talking by a good salesman.

Government Should Advertise.

If the government, which has now come into the banking business, wants to make a success of its new enterprise, it ought to follow the example of other banks and advertise in the newspapers, says the Burlington (Ia) Hawkeye. The national and state savings banks have found they can increase new business by publicity; by telling the people of various advantages to be gained by patronizing their banks. The postal savings funds have had the benefit of much preliminary announcement in the press, but the proposition is a new one, and many people do not yet understand it. Judicious newspaper advertising of the specialties of the postal savings system would bring increased deposits and popularize the new business. The government through its financial agents, could put the press in front of its great hold-ups. The same policy applied to a postal savings system would bring similar desirable returns.

Mark Your Newspaper Ads."

"I am, my gentlemen, that the only way to promote a campaign nowadays is to advertise in the newspapers," said Norman R. Stark, chairman of the Democratic national committee, in an address at the banquet of the Sphinx club of New York city, an organization of advertising men. "I would spend 10 per cent. of all the campaign fund for newspaper advertising."

ASHAMED OF HER FACE

It was a case of a woman who was all but a simpleton, but was not quite so simple as to be taken in by the temptation of a man who was not her husband.

She was a member of the Legion, and the man, a Legionnaire. He was a member of the Legion and that was his excuse.

He was a member of the Legion, and she was a member of the Legion.

We will leave the story to follow.

Spruce Trees Nursed by Pines.

A singular fact with regard to the retention of different species of trees has been brought out by the observations of the presidents of the American Forests. It was observed that when pine trees were planted near spruce trees that the latter did not grow as well as those planted in the open air. The explanation for this is that the spruce trees excrete a resinous substance which is injurious to the pine trees.

Old Tree Loses Roots.

Now that the tree has lost its roots, the tree begins to decay, and the trunk falls to the ground, the surrounding vegetation thus becoming more abundant.

Birds and Fishes and Glass.

A correspondent recently reported what he described as the "curious freak" of a blackbird flying against a parlor window many times at the same spot continuously.

Such an incident is not uncommon. Birds have been known to fight for hours at a time, day after day, with their own image reflected in a pane of glass, pecking and fluttering against the pane and quite exhausting themselves in their fury to demolish the supposed rival. It is another instance of how the arts of civilization corrupt and confuse the birds. It is the same with fishes. Darwin tells a story of a pike in an aquarium separated by plate glass from fish which were its proper food. In trying to get at the fish the pike would often dash with such violence against the glass as to be completely stunned. It did this for more than three months before it learned caution. Then when the glass was removed the pike would not attack those particular fish, but would devour others freshly introduced. It did not at all understand the situation, but associated the punishment it had received not with the glass, but with a particular kind of fish.

Child Death.

When Thomas G. Blythe, the writer, was editing a newspaper in New York City, a reporter one night told J. E. B. Smith, and his son, that he had to add Smith's name to the roll of the dead, as he had been killed in the fire. The boy asked if it was true that his father had died in the fire, and the reporter said, "Yes, he died in the fire." The boy then asked, "Is that the reason why you are here?" The reporter said, "No, I am here to help you get your father buried." Blythe said, "I am here to help you get your father buried." The boy then asked, "Is that the reason why you are here?" The reporter said, "No, I am here to help you get your father buried." The boy then asked, "Is that the reason why you are here?" The reporter said, "No, I am here to help you get your father buried."

Wagner's Last Words.

There have been so many and conflicting stories published by the press of Dothan, Mo., to the effect that Wagner died at this point, it is impossible to say definitely that he did die here, but it is certain that he did die here. At the age of 80 he had been a resident of Dothan for 40 years. On Tuesday he left for Dothan, Mo., to visit his son, but died en route, and died very quietly without any relatives present. In the manner of Dothan, Mo., he died in his van. "I am satisfied today," After he died he went to his study and worked on an essay on "The Penitile in the Human." He failed to be engaged in the noon meal, and the family and an intimate friend were enquiring when a woman servant rushed in and said that the great man was ill. He was placed on a cot in his study, and while removing some of his clothes a watch which his wife had given to him fell to the floor. He gasped, "My watch! And these were the last words he uttered.

A Rich One.

"Why, there's no money in that."

"But all the philanthropists have been very rich."

Flood of Affidavits in Kansas Tarring Case

WOMAN WHO WAS TARRED AND FEATHERED APPEARS IN COURT ROOM

Lincoln Center, Kans., Nov. 16.—Pleads of guilty were suddenly announced in the circuit court here today by three of the men charged in connection with the tarring of Miss Mary Chamberlain, the school teacher who was beaten and her school trashed. Those around the pleas are:

Everett G. Clark, president of a Shady Bend Milling Company.

Watson Scranton, shadyside farm.

J. Fitz Water Shadyside farm.

Judge Grover reserved sentence. A flood of affidavits was let loose in the circuit court here today at the beginning of the hearing of an application by Everett G. Clark, a wealthy miller of Shady Bend for a change of venue in the case in which he, with eight other men, is charged with assault and battery in connection with the tarring and trashing of Miss Chamberlain last Aug. 20.

Miss Chamberlain was in court accompanied by her mother and brother.

Since Miss Chamberlain was discovered to a lonely spot on a country road, seized by a band of more than a dozen men, her clothing torn off and her body covered with tar, she has remained in close retirement in her home in the little Shady Bend community where she taught school and where it is said her popularity with the men caused jealous wives and sweethearts to curse husbands and lovers to inflict on her the torture which created a storm of indignation throughout the state.

At the opening of court today McCannister stated that he had more than 300 affidavits to offer to the court to prove that there is no reason why a fair trial should not be given all accused men in the case.

Admission of Guilt.

An admission of guilt in the tarring party case came yesterday. Edward Riedel, a barber admitted he decorated Miss Mary Chamberlain a school teacher to the point near Shady Bend where she was tared on August 7. He went before Judge Glover and entered a plea of guilty. Sentence was suspended until after the trial of the other accused men.

Riedel has been in jail for the last three months awaiting action on an appeal from a justice court sentence of one year for complicity in the attack on Miss Chamberlain. He was the first man arrested in connection with the tarring party case. It is alleged that he received $100 in part in the affair.

According to Miss Chamberlain she accompanied Riedel on the night of the attack under the impression that he was taking her to a dance.

Riedel expects leniency as the result of his confession.

Attorneys for both sides in the case spent the greater part of today collecting witness and evidence to be used tomorrow when the trial for a change of venue in the case of Everett G. Clark, clinched with leading the attack on Miss Chamberlain comes up for hearing. Clark contends a prejudiced exists against him in this county.

ST. MARYS ISLAND OF OCEAN

Washington Nov. 15.—To render assistance to vessels in distress at sea during the season of bad weather President Taft today ordered the entire Atlantic fleet of revenue cutters to patrol the coast from Maine to Florida, beginning Dec. 1, remaining at sea practically continuously until April 1, 1919.
